A major depressive episode may be the initial presentation of bipolar disorder. It is generally well known though not established in controlled trials that treating such an episode with an antidepressant alone may increase the likelihood of precipitation of a mixed/manic episode in patients at risk for bipolar disorder. Whether any of the symptoms described above represent such a conversion is unknown. However, prior to initiating treatment with an antidepressant, patients with depressive symptoms should be adequately screened to determine if they are at risk for bipolar disorder; such screening should include a detailed psychiatric history, including a family history of suicide, bipolar disorder, & depression. It should be noted that tramadol collect on delivery is not approved for use in treating bipolar depression.
