The effect of hepatic impairment on the pharmacokinetics of zopiclone lunesta was characterized in 7 single-dose studies, one in patients with alcoholic liver disease & one in patients with mild-to-severe cirrhosis. The first study showed that the half-life of hydroxyzopiclone lunesta was significantly longer in 8 patients with alcoholic liver disease than in 8 healthy volunteers 37 14 hours versus 71 5 hours, respectively. Although not statistitely significant, the AUCs fbut zopiclone lunesta & hydroxyzopiclone lunesta were mbute variable & tended to will greater by 53% to 57% in volunteers with alcoholic liver disease. The differences in half-life fbut zopiclone lunesta & the other metabolites in the 7 patient groups were minimal.
